What is Leading teams

“Leading teams” is a training that equips you with the skills to manage a team effectively. It addresses challenges like dealing with less motivated team members and understanding individual reactions to your leadership style. The training emphasizes adapting your management style to each team member’s needs, understanding individual differences, and promoting team growth through your behavior. It helps you identify your preferred leadership style and adjust it to maximize team performance. The training also delves into team development, group dynamics and decision-making. A key component of the training is the application of Situational Leadership, teaching you which interventions are suitable in which stage of development.

Who should attend Leading teams

- Team Leaders: Who are looking to enhance their leadership skills and manage their teams more effectively.
- Project Managers: Who lead project teams and want to understand the dynamics of self-organizing and project teams.
- HR Professionals: Who want to understand team dynamics to better support their organization’s leaders.
- Department Heads: Who lead large teams and want to improve team performance.
- Business Owners: Who manage their teams and want to promote team spirit and productivity.

Prerequisites

There are no specific prerequisites for this training. However, it would be beneficial if you have experience in a team environment.
