What is Data Security and Privacy in a Data Driven Organisation

The importance of data and the value you can derive from it is becoming clear to more and more organizations. At the same time, with the introduction of the GDPR, more and more attention is being paid to Data Security and Data Privacy. But how do you ensure that you can get as much value as possible from your data and at the same time be compliant with the GDPR? This question is central to the training 'Data Security and Privacy in a Data-driven Organization'.

Within the training 'Data Security and Privacy in a Data-driven Organization' you will learn, among other things:

- Find a way in the split between the GDPR and your information needs
- How you can grant access to data to your employees (and to which data especially not)
- How and when you can properly protect personal data within data flows
- Methods and techniques to properly protect personal data

During the training, the application of what you learn is central and you are challenged to work with the theory in practical cases. The training is given by people who work in practice within BI and DWH environments and know what it is about. They want to pass on that practical knowledge.
